Comprehension:

Read the given passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

During the monsoon, little Aarav would sit by the window with a stack of old newspapers. As the rain tapped gently against the glass, he folded paper boats—some neat, some lopsided. When the rain eased, he'd rush outside and release them into the flowing gutters. Neighbours often warned, "You'll catch a cold!" But he only smiled. One evening, a much older man stood watching. "You remind me of someone," he said softly, eyes distant. Aarav offered him a freshly made boat. The man took it, carefully placed it in the water, and whispered, "I used to do this too." Aarav beamed, not needing words to understand. Over the next few weeks, they folded boats together—old fingers and young ones, creasing memories into paper. The boats didn't go far, but they carried something real. Sometimes, a quiet tradition is enough to link one heart to another.
